SLE-1 (Section TSS)
Suppose a system of linear equations is known to have at least one solution and that the coefficient matrix has a column of zeros. Prove that the system has infinitely many solutions.
[Note: If you think the row-reduced form of the augmented matrix will have a column of zeros, you will need to first prove that fact before you can use it. ]